Strategies for Rural Prosperity

Rural communities across the country are taking an entrepreneurial approach to economic revival. And it's working.

Rural North America is a remarkably diverse collection of regions and communities. Each region and community has unique assets, development histories and preferences for community economic development. Entrepreneur-led development is the foundation for all community economic development for all communities and particularly rural communities. In the United States, unlike other developed economies such as Canada, the European Union and Japan, the primary responsibility for a community's development and success is rooted with local communities, and their leaders and community builders.

For rural communities beginning their entrepreneurial journey, Strategies for Rural Prosperity provides a framework for rural relevant community economic development, and 11 likely entrepreneurial development opportunities. The 11 entrepreneurial development opportunity strategies are anchored in over 40 years of field experience from across the North American continent. These strategies are practical and innovated by rural people and communities. Strategies for Rural Prosperity captures these insights and provides both development frameworks that can be customized to your community, and guides for crafting and executing high impact entrepreneurial game plans.

Author Don Macke shares his nearly 50 years of rural community economic development experience, working in nearly every rural region in North America including providences in Canada and the Caribbean. Don is a regional economist, rural development practitioner and chronicler of rural development innovation. Don was a founder and co-director of the national Center for Rural Entrepreneurship and now lead's e2 Entrepreneurial Ecosystems by NetWork Kansas. Kate Pope Hodel has worked in entrepreneurship for about 35 years and, along with Maria Meyers, co-authored Beyond Collisions: How to Build Your Entrepreneurial Infrastructure (2017).
